From School Library Journal

Grade 2–3—This slight story makes some heavy-handed points about overcoming racism and adversity. It begins with two young patients of different races who have been forced to share a hospital room. Skippy has cancer and Connor has diabetes, and they both want another roommate. They are awakened from naps by Batboy Ray, who whisks them back in time to meet Babe Ruth and Jackie Robinson. The athletes spout truisms about getting along with others, being a team player, and never giving up. The boys also encounter a teenaged Roberto Clemente; Negrón's real-life mentor, George Steinbrenner; and Yankees pitcher Chien-Ming Wang. Soon the boys are the best of friends. This unoriginal tale clumsily uses two of baseball's greatest heroes to hammer home its obvious points; the weak story sinks under the weight of its overbearing message.—Marilyn Taniguchi, Beverly Hills Public Library, CA

From Booklist

Negrón, a former Yankee batboy and current consultant to George Steinbrenner, offers a fable about getting along. Skippy and Connor have illness in common, but they don't want to be hospital roommates because they are different races. Then a mystical figure, Ray the batboy, appears and takes them on a journey to meet baseball greats (and apparent friends) Babe Ruth and Jackie Robinson. This purposeful tale, told in staid prose, is matched by Seeley's somewhat stiff art. The premise itself is engaging, as Babe shows his affection and support for barrier-breaking Robinson, but with no source information, readers won't know if this relationship is based on fact. The only note details Negrón's own experience with prejudice and the advice to accept others and treat them with dignity. A final page given to "A Psychological Overview" by a team doctor might have been better used to separate fact from fiction. Negrón's The Boy of Steel was a New York Times best-seller, so there may be demand. Grades K-3. --Ilene Cooper

Skippy and Connor don't like each other. In fact, each of them wants a new roommate because the other is too "different." Stuck in the hospital with serious illnesses, the boys get a surprise visit from Ray, a Yankee batboy who whisks them away on a magical journey back in time to meet the legendary Babe Ruth. The adventure doesn't stop there, as the Bambino takes them to see baseball hero Jackie Robinson play at Ebbets Field. Along the way, the Babe and Jackie share some unforgettable lessons with their young friends about baseball, friendship, and accepting others' differences.

Ray Negrón and Laura Seeley, the New York Times bestselling team from the boy of steel, have hit another home run with The Greatest Story Never Told: The Babe and Jackie, a touching story inspired by real events related to Ray by Babe Ruth's granddaughter.

The Greatest story never told

By A Customer

I purchased this book for my 6 year old grandson who enjoys Baseball, he really enjoyed this story, I recommend this book for all to read.

A Beautiful Story - Beautifully Presented

By Edin Beaulieu

If anything, Ray Negron's followup to The Boy of Steel has shown his growth as an author. Using Babe Ruth and Jackie Robinson to help two sick boys understand about prejudice and "differences" is pure magic. The illustrations are glorious. Laura Seeley captures the aging Babe Ruth in almost photographic beauty with that special twinkle in his eye that was Babe. This is a book to be treasured and passed down from children to grandchildren. It is also the perfect classroom and hospital book and a wonderful edition to any childhood library.
